AIM

Employment, in its quantitative and more pertinently in its qualitative aspects, is one of the central concerns of public policy. While employment creation remains a crucial long term policy goal, it is now emerging as one of the most important policy instruments for tackling economic slowdown. Employment is not only a macroeconomic phenomena – its importance and social and individual level is far greater. Employment remains the foremost means for providing social security and tackling insecurities at the individual level. It is in this context that this programme addresses various dimensions related to generation of quality employment as a means to achieve the national goal of sustainable and inclusive growth.

OBJECTIVES

- Examine the linkages between employment, economic growth and development
- Analyse emerging trends in employment
- Share good practices on quality employment generation
- Discuss strategies to evolve quality employment as a catalyst for achieving the national goal sustainable and inclusive growth
